I love the self-checking aspect of this book and it has a great selection of words. My son likes using this book. He's in 7th grade, about to start 8th. He has used this for the whole 2nd half of the school year.

This is good for our 14 year old grandson

I really like this book for the content, page appearance, and the clever game to find the answer to a question posed at the beginning of each section. My daughter enjoyed working in the previous book in the series and I think she (and I ) will enjoy this one too.

My son has been using this as a summer workbook. He has enjoyed this workbook, and has learned many new words. I feel it will prepare him for his next grade.

Good book for a kid in middle school to expand his vocabulary or just at least get exposed to different words. My son has learned the meaning of many words he did not know before and I made him learn the spelling of some of them. I like this book.

It dosn't mater hou smert you our, Ef you can't spell . . . .Ok, well I'm sure you get the irony.I use this as a homeschooling tool for vocabulary. While many schools have their students learn up to 50 words per week (and I have no problem with that), I like the pace of this book, the games, and activities. Now while some things can get redundant, you can certain make up you own games to add to what they've already present you with.I've already had my homeschooler stand in front of the class and teach. He seems to enjoy that.

The book is as it says but the students are not a huge fan of the layout.
