In 2009, Tom Le Mesurier left London looking for adventure. He spent the next year traveling through South and Central America until a chance meeting with a Brazilian journalist in Nicaragua led him to Rio de Janeiro. He fell in love with the journalist and her city; four short months later they were married, and Tom was taking Portuguese lessons. Today, Tom takes guests on culinary walking tours while sharing restaurant recommendations on his website, Eat Rio (eatrio.net). When it comes to finding new bars and restaurants, Tom likes to think of himself as a dedicated researcher.

Received today my copy of the Hunt Guide to Rio, which I bought for a trip to Rio in August for the Olympics. The Hunt Guides are ultimate "insider guides," with recommendations of restaurants, bars, street food, local markets and tourist sites curated by a local authority. This one is a great example of the form. Tom Le Mesurier, an expat Brit, has maintained the website "Eat Rio" for several years, and his nose for finding the best new and traditional spots is unrivaled. I am looking forward to following his leads.
