If you're looking for a great place for an adventure that is exotic and full of old world charm, but you don't want to travel too far from home. Then why not make a trip to Charleston South Carolina originally part of the 13 colonies (until it became a separate state). Charleston is full of old world, British colonial charm Charleston boasts some fantastic examples of British colonial architecture in everything from homes to churches. If you are interested in colonial architecture, and/or old world charm then it is suggested that you visit the Cathedral of St. John the Baptist is located in the heart of Charleston's historic district and is an excellent example of old world craftsmanship with its stained glass windows. Marble floors and granite columns, magnificent pipe organ and the pews made of solid Flemish oak and each individually hand carved. The Cathedral is impressive, just for its large dimensions, live alone, the spectacular architecture and exquisite craftsmanship that casinos should be visited regardless of your religious beliefs it should be appreciated as a living piece of art. After you leave the Cathedral, you should head over to the old city market. (Used to be headquarters for the slave auctions, as well as the cotton exchange) The old city market is a four block open-air market space. That is jam packed with vendors selling everything from pottery and hand blown glass to paintings from classical to modern artistic styles a lot of tourists clamor to purchase a world-famous Sweet grass basket. Some of these bastards have been known to date back to before slavery. Aside from its artistic wares, the market is known for its baked goods and other foods such as homemade jam and organic local honey, and many other Southern specialties. So if you work up a slight appetite walking around looking at all the fantastic treasures this is a great place to pick up a snack. The market is open 365 days a year and there is no cover charge to window shop. If you decided to forgo the snack at the market and instead saved your appetite for a meal once you have finished exploring the market there are many great restaurants in Charleston that serve everything from local Southern comfort food, as well as burgers and fries, craft beers, and everything in between you will definitely be able to find something to suit your taste or mood all that is necessary to find a restaurant or bar of your liking is to walk down King or market Street (the two original streets of Charleston) as either one of these streets contains a plethora of restaurants.
