Customer Reviews

Makers of doll house textiles often have problems doing authentic detail in the 1/12 scale needed to fit. Both of these books address this concern, providing accessories 8" on a side or smaller charted for needlepoint at 24 stitches to the inch. The McNaughtons' work, a sequel to their Making Miniature Oriental Rugs & Carpets, has a new selection of tiny rugs with fantastic detail. There appears to be no simplification of design from the full-size originals. Whitehead's wall hangings are original designs based on historic motifs. Both books are charted in full color, with the Whitehead book having additional black-and-white charts. The oriental rug charts are keyed to Appleton's crewel wool, and the wall hangings are keyed to DMC and Anchor cotton floss. Both books are excellent additions to collections catering to miniaturists and needleworkers. Copyright 2001 Reed Business Information, Inc.

Love this book! Inspires me to do wonderful designs!

Fascinating . Enjoy it muchly

Exactly what I was hoping for,...

Great illustrations and directions.

Love thank you

I thought this book was lovely and well illustrated, and can't wait to start on some of the projects. There is a good selection of tapestries types and colors. I've seen one review from a disgruntled buyer but personally I didn't expect (and couldn't handle anyway) extremely elaborated and detailed museum tapestries - not all could be brought down to this scale and handled by amateurs. This isn't basic, don't let me mislead you there - I just think that anyone who complained also likes doing 10,000-piece jigsaw puzzles :-)

Great fun

I was very disappointed with this book. I had expected some wonderful recreations of patterns and designs I had seen in tapestries and photos of Tudor castles and medieval settings but very little of that is to be had here. If you are interested in it, check out a copy of this at your local library before purchasing, if you're still interested go forth and buy, but at least you'll have heads up on the limited nature of this collection.
